PRIMARY LOCKUP

Use the primary wordmark on light surfaces. Keep the mark simple and avoid placing it on busy imagery without a solid or blurred backing.

Do not stretch or distort the logo

Do not recolour it outside the approved palette

Do not place it over low-contrast image areas

Imagery and voice

Image direction and copy rules to avoid generic production language and keep the site client-facing.

IMAGERY RULES

- High-quality real photography or curated case-study visuals
- Avoid images with embedded text because the website applies live text overlays.
- Leave negative space for headlines and CTAs in hero images.
- Use real or generated category-specific imagery before abstract decoration.

COPY SHOULD DO THIS

- Lead with concrete customer value
- Use plain language
- Keep calls to action action-oriented
- Support claims with proof

COPY SHOULD AVOID

- Internal production labels
- Template wording
- Vague premium/modern filler
- Overpromising unsupported outcomes

- Buttons must remain at least 44px tall on touch devices.
- Do not rely on colour alone to communicate state.
- Use live HTML text over images, never text baked into generated hero imagery.

Production checklist

A compact handoff checklist for designers, builders, and reviewers.

USE THIS

- Use the approved palette through CSS variables and DaisyUI/Tailwind tokens.
- Repeat the primary CTA after proof-heavy sections.
- Keep imagery, typography, and buttons consistent across page templates.

AVOID THIS

- Do not mix a second UI library without approval.
- Do not create one-off colours outside the token set.
- Do not use placeholder or production-process labels in client-facing pages.

BUILDER HANDOFF

Use these guidelines as the client-facing source of truth for design tokens, imagery, copy tone, and component polish.
